INTRODUCTION

The Plunkett family of Tallanstown

The Plunkett family of Tallanstown, county Louth was descended from Sir Hugh de Plunkett, an Anglo-Norman who came to Ireland during the reign of Henry II. From then on the family owned lands in Louth. From the fourteenth century they lived at Bewley (Beaulieu) near Drogheda, and a branch of the family was associated with Tallanstown by the late fifteenth century. Early in the fourteenth century, John Plunkett of Bewley, a direct descendent of Sir Hugh, had two sons. One of these, Richard Plunkett, was the ancestor of two titled landowning families; the Earls of Fingall and the Barons of Dunsany, of Dunsany Castle, county Meath – Christopher Plunkett was created Lord Dunsany in 1461. The other son, John Plunkett of Bewley, was the ancestor of the Lords Louth. Of John Plunkett's direct descendants, his grandson, Walter Plunkett of Bewley, was Sheriff of county Louth in 1401, a position later held by Sir John Plunkett of Bewley, Kilsaran and Tallanstown, who died in 1508.

Sir John's son Oliver Plunkett was created Baron of Louth by Henry VIII on 15 June 1541. This was one of six additions to the Irish peerage made that month, the outcome of the Lord Deputy's policy that it would be easier to ensure the loyalty of the King's Irish subjects 'by small gifts and honest persuasion than by rigor'. By this time the Plunketts owned a tower house at Tallanstown, later called Louth Hall. It was there that the Lords Louth were to live for the next four hundred years. The 3rd Baron Louth, Patrick Plunkett, was killed in 1578 in county Monaghan while trying to recover cattle that had been stolen from him. He died without a male heir and was succeeded by his brother, Oliver Plunkett.

During the Elizabethan conquest the Plunketts of Tallanstown remained loyal to the English Crown. But they also formed connections with the old Gaelic culture; in the seventeenth century they were closely allied with the MacDonnells of Antrim and the O'Neills of Clondeboye. But as the Plunkett estate had always been within the Pale, in a region dominated by the 'Old English', they did not become Gaelicised like, for instance, some similar families in Munster. The Plunketts adhered to the Catholic faith through the 16th and 17th centuries. St Oliver Plunkett, the Catholic Archbishop of Armagh and primate of Ireland, who was put to death in London for high treason in 1681, was closely related to the Plunketts' kinsman, the Earl of Fingall. In the mid-seventeenth century Lord Louth supported Oliver Plunkett and provided lodgings for him on his return to Ireland from Rome in 1670.

Though the Plunketts were deeply involved in the upheavals of the 1640s and 1689-91, they survived with their lands intact. During the rebellion of 1641, the 6th Baron Louth, Oliver Plunkett, together with several other Catholic Old English lords of the Pale, formed an alliance with Irish rebel leaders from Ulster. The Catholic gentry of Louth appointed Lord Louth as colonel-general of the royalist forces to be raised in the county, though he declined the position. He was taken prisoner in 1642 and outlawed for high treason. Under the Cromwellian land settlement, his lands were forfeited. When Charles II returned to the throne in 1660, most of these lands were restored to Lord Louth and to his son Matthew.

The accession of James II gave new life to Catholic aspirations. Matthew, the 7th Baron Louth, joined the Jacobite cause in 1689 and commanded an infantry regiment at the siege of Derry. He was outlawed and exiled, and died in September 1689. Thomas, his second son, who had been sent to France for his education, returned and took part in the Jacobite campaigns, and was at Derry, the Boyne, Limerick, Aughrim and again at Limerick for the surrender, after which he sailed with Sarsfield for the continent. He had been indicted and outlawed after the Battle of the Boyne, and after the war ended he was indicted for high treason committed 'in parts beyond the sea'. He remained in the service of France for many years but returned to Louth Hall where he made a will in 1732 and died soon after. His son Matthew was a captain in the Austrian Imperial infantry.

The 8th Baron Louth, Oliver, was only twenty-one when he succeeded to the title in 1689. Like his brother, he joined the Jacobite forces and was outlawed, and was in Limerick at the surrender in 1691. He was pardoned under the Articles of Limerick. He was made secure in his estates without much trouble and intended to resume his hereditary place in the Irish House of Lords. But he was prevented from taking his seat on the grounds that he had not proved the reversal of his grandfather's outlawry for rebellion in 1641. Eventually, the question of outlawry was resolved and he was summoned to the House of Lords. In October 1695 Lord Louth took the oath of fidelity. But he refused to take both the oath of royal supremacy over the church and a declaration against Catholic religious practices and beliefs, and was ordered to withdraw. Attitudes towards Catholics hardened from the late 1690s under the Popery Acts, and it was another hundred years before a holder of the Louth title was permitted to sit in the House of Lords.

During the period of the Penal Laws, life was made hard for landowning Catholics. Like several other Catholic landowners in county Louth, the Plunketts changed their religion in the early 1700s. Matthew, the 9th Baron Louth (1698-1754), was a minor when his father Oliver died in November 1707. Eighteen months later he was brought to England and was put under the guardianship of Matthew Aylmer, a first cousin of his grandfather, and a convert to Protestantism. Matthew, the heir to the Louth title, was a sickly child, but grew up to marry an Englishwoman, father an heir and settle in Louth Hall. His guardian, Aylmer, saw that he was educated in the Protestant religion. Aylmer unsuccessfully petitioned Queen Anne on Matthew's behalf seeking that the minor be restored to all the family's honours. Matthew remained a Protestant and his descendants were members of the Church of Ireland for many generations. But in the nineteenth century the family returned to the Catholic faith and Randal Percy Otway, the 13th Baron, was received into the Catholic Church on 6 December 1867.

Thomas Oliver, the 11th Baron Louth (1757-1823), had the outlawry of his great grandfather annulled, and took his seat in the House of Lords in 1798. His son, also Thomas Oliver, born in 1809, became the 12th Baron Louth. He died in 1849. After their involvement in the wars of the seventeenth century, none of the Plunketts of Tallanstown were prominent in national affairs. They took part in political and public life only on the local, county level. The family's military tradition persisted into the 19th and 20th centuries. The 13th Baron, Randal Percy Otway Plunkett (1832-1883), was an officer in the 79th Highlanders in the 1850s. The 14th Baron, Randal Pilgrim Ralph Plunkett (1868-1941), was an officer in the Westminster Dragoons and the Wiltshire Regiment, and served in the First and Second World Wars.

The 14th Baron is the last of the family to be represented in the papers. Although he was not prominent in politics, he did take part in public life. He was a member of the Irish Reform Association, and took part in the campaign for a Catholic University. In politics he was a Unionist. His papers show that he was an active sportsman and also travelled widely. The 14th Baron sold most of the estate soon after the 1903 Wyndham Land Act. He died in 1941, and his only surviving son, Otway, was briefly 15th Baron Louth, before his death in 1950. The house and demesne at Tallanstown were also sold, some years after the estate, and the family settled in Jersey.

The Estates

From the creation of the Louth title, and during the entire period represented in these papers, Lord Louth's residence and demesne were at Louth Hall, just south of the village of Tallanstown in county Louth, five miles from the town of Ardee. The house is set high on a hillside beside the Glyde river. A survey from the 1830s shows that the greater part of the estate, amounting to 3,068 English statute acres, lay in the adjoining civil parishes of Charlestown, Clonkeehan, Louth and Tallanstown. Also in county Louth there were 218 acres in Oberstown (parish of Shanlis) and a house in Carlingford. Outside the county Lord Louth owned 161 acres in Archerstown in the parish of Donaghmore and barony of Ratoath in county Meath, and 371 acres in Lacklum and Lannatt, both in the parish of Inniskeen, in the barony of Farney, county Monaghan.

In 1876, the estate consisted of 3,578 acres in county Louth, valued at £3,983 5s, and 178 acres in Monaghan valued at £131 10s, while Lady Louth owned the 161 acres in Meath, valued at £150 10s. Lord Louth also held 178 acres in Somerset and four acres in Galway. Besides these lands, at various times the Plunketts owned lands in county Kildare. In 1677, Matthew Plunkett bought the castle and lands of Kiladowan, county Kildare, including two mills. In 1721 a John Sweetman was renting 260 acres at Kiladowan from Lord Louth. But these lands were sold at some point, as the family owned no lands in Kildare by 1876. Lands amounting to at least 138 acres at Knavinstown, county Kildare appear to have been bought near the end of the nineteenth century by the 14th Lord; in the early years of the twentieth century they were rented by a farmer, George H. Fawcett.

Although the estate remained largely intact between the sixteenth century and the twentieth century, some lands were lost. After the rebellion of 1641, lands were sequestered by the Crown, some of which were granted away to soldiers and adventurers under Cromwell, but most of these were later returned to the family. In 1662, after the restoration of Charles II, the Commission appointed by that year's Act of Settlement decreed that Matthew 7th Baron should get possession of the estate. His son, also Matthew, was adjudged to be an 'innocent Papist' and the estate was restored to him after his father's death in 1679. Several other large Catholic landowners in county Louth also recovered their lands, unlike most of the smaller owners.

Despite the decisions of the 1662 Commission, it still cost Lord Louth trouble and expense to recover his estate. Some of those in occupation had to be bought out. For instance one Andrew Lloyd, who held Irishtown and Tallanstown, agreed to give up these lands on payment of £400 in 1661, but the deal was only completed in 1669. Some lands were permanently lost at this time. These included the lands of the former Hospitaller preceptory of Kilsaran, which the Lords Louth had first leased from the Hospitallers, then from the Crown, and then, it seems, held by outright grant; but they failed to regain them in the 1660s. In the early eighteenth century the estate was increasingly burdened by debts. In the late eighteenth century and early nineteenth, improvements were made to the estate and to Louth Hall, mostly in the time of Thomas, the 11th Baron. In 1837 Samuel Lewis noted in his Topographical Dictionary of Ireland that the demesne at Tallanstown amounted to about 250 acres and was well planted with trees, and that the estate included '700 acres of the best land in Ireland, under tillage'. He also wrote that in the parish of Tallanstown, 'the soil is in general good, and agriculture has greatly advanced, the resident gentry and farmers having exerted themselves to introduce the improved system both in the cultivation of land and in the rearing of cattle'. The estate was surveyed in 1832-3 by James Frain and John McQuillan, and again by John F. McGahon of Dundalk in 1906, in connection with the estate sale.

Rents from the estate provided the main source of income for the Plunkett family. In 1716 the estate brought in a yearly rent of £1,700. By the early 1830s this had increased to £4,499. By 1903 the rental was £3,009. The family's other main source of income was the estate farm, and at times they leased the demesne land at Tallanstown to graziers. Lord Louth employed a steward to manage the farm. As for the management of the entire estate, the papers show that over time the various tasks and duties shifted between Lord Louth and the stewards and agents he employed. As was typical for an estate of this size, in the course of the nineteenth century this role passed to a firm of professional estate agents, who dealt with rent collection, evictions of tenants and the buying and selling of land. From the 1850s until the sale of the estate in the early twentieth century, Lord Louth's agent was the Dublin firm of Stewart and Kincaid, later Kincaid and Sons.

The Plunkett family was not significantly involved in any other businesses. An eighteenth-century rent roll mentions copper mines on that part of the estate in county Meath, but there is no other evidence of mining. Through the centuries there were several mills on the estate, which were rented by tenants of Lord Louth. In the eighteenth century one of these, the 'Mills of Louth', was run by the Connellan family, and did a great deal of business with Louth Hall; and around 1800, an old water-powered flour mill at Tallanstown was leased to a tenant on condition that he restored it to working order.

Louth Hall itself originated as a late-medieval tower house. Like many such tower houses, it was enlarged in the eighteenth century. A three-storey wing, one room thick, was added to one side of the tower in 1760. In 1805 a new suite of reception rooms, and battlements, were added by Richard Johnston, elder brother of the well-known architect Francis Johnston. Account books from 1805-8 record many payments for mason work and decorating materials for the 'new room'. In 1805 the tower house was also largely remodeled and given pointed windows. These neo-medieval, Gothic features gave the house its present-day picturesque appearance. Today the house, which has been unoccupied for several decades, is near derelict.

Irish land ownership was transformed in the early decades of the twentieth century. In response to tenant farmers' agitation the British government introduced the 'Wyndham' Land Purchase Act in 1903. Almost immediately after the Act was passed, negotiations began between Lord Louth and his tenants, and in the years 1906-9 most of the estate was sold to the tenants. The family continued to hold the house and its demesne, but began to spend much of their time in England. After the death of the 14th Baron in 1941, the house and remaining lands were sold, and there have been several owners since.

The Papers

The papers were surveyed for the National Library by Sir John Ainsworth, Inspector of Manuscripts (see NLI Reports on Private Collections, No. 165). This is a lengthy report which, under several general categories, lists many of the more important documents, and includes transcriptions of some documents, including wills and rent rolls. Ainsworth wrote a shorter supplementary report (NLI Report on Private Collections, No. 456) which lists, giving general descriptions, some bundles of eighteenth- and nineteenth-century letters. A small portion of the collection was catalogued by the National Library and listed in Richard Hayes's Manuscript Sources for the History of Irish Civilisation. These papers are of various types. They include several volumes of estate accounts and rentals from the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. Hayes also catalogued a few sixteenth- and seventeenth-century documents, some early-twentieth-century household receipts, and some genealogical material.

In 2001 the archive was identified as suitable for processing by the holder of the Studentship in Irish History provided by the National Library in association with the Irish Committee of Historical Sciences. The present list makes the entire collection, consisting of several thousand documents, available to researchers for the first time.

The Louth archive is in many ways typical of the collections produced by Irish landed estates between the sixteenth century and the early twentieth century. The earliest document is a 'Pardon of Alienations' granted by Queen Elizabeth to Oliver, 4th Lord Louth in 1548. The most recent document is from 1941. But the papers are not spread evenly over this period. The bulk of the collection is from two shorter periods: firstly, the eighteenth century and secondly, the end of the nineteenth and start of the twentieth centuries. But there are also many seventeenth-century documents. Only a few survive from the sixteenth. The collection contains many documents relating to land ownership, including title deeds, leases, and mortgages. Most of the earliest papers, those from the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, fall into this category. These deeds and leases provide valuable information on patterns of landholding from the seventeenth to the nineteenth century. There are also many documents arising from court cases, including bills of complaint, briefs, affidavits and judgments. Most of these legal papers date from the eighteenth century, and most relate to the estate and Lord Louth's finances.

The largest part of the collection consists of the many volumes and documents relating to the administration of the estate. These include rentals, which list the tenants and their rents. Among these are many eighteenth-century rent rolls and several volumes from the 1850s and 1860s. There are also many estate accounts and rent receipts. This section also includes accounts and receipts relating to payments to public bodies, which included quit rents and hearth tax.

There is a good deal of material produced by the estate farm. Hundreds of accounts and receipts provide details of items bought by the stewards, and farm produce sold. And the men and women who worked on the farm, and the wages paid to them, are recorded in receipts and wage books. There are nine workmen's wages account books from between 1864 and 1892. There are also accounts of wages paid to tradesmen and to servants. Of the papers relating to the estate itself, the other main section is a large collection of letters to the successive landlords from agents, lawyers and others. There is also some material relating to the eventual sale of the estate to its tenants.

There are several notable gaps in the estate papers. As few letters survive from the mid-nineteenth century, there is very little reference to the Great Famine. However, three or four items do refer to conditions on the estate at that time and they note considerable hardship for at least some of the tenants. Likewise, during the years of the Land War from 1879 through the 1880s, mainly due to the absence of letters for the period, the agitation, local or national, goes almost unmentioned.

A part of the archive consists of personal material generated by members of the Plunkett family at Tallanstown. There are a few genealogical documents, and several wills and marriage settlements. Of the personal and household material, of particular note is the large collection of bills and receipts accumulated by the family between the 1720s and 1941. These items number over two thousand, though there are gaps for the periods of roughly 1770-1800, 1810-30, and 1880-1900. The receipts contain details of expenditure on food, drink, clothes, medicines and other domestic requirements. Most were purchased in the immediate locality and in other parts of county Louth, or in Dublin. From the mid-nineteenth century, however, more and more items were purchased in England – mainly in London and Brighton, and there are also some receipts accumulated during visits to France and India.

The large collection of personal papers of the 14th Baron includes several of his diaries, items related to several businesses of which he was a director after the sale of the estate, and material relating to his sporting activities, his early interest in motor cars, and his travels in India in 1899-1900.

One of the larger parts of the collection is the correspondence of family members. Almost all of the eighteenth-century letters are to, from, or in some way connected with Matthew Plunkett (1697-1754), the 9th Baron. These letters were no doubt preserved because he was deeply in debt and the estate was heavily mortgaged. The collection contains over five hundred letters to the 9th Baron, most of which are concerned with his debts and legal matters related to the estate. There are, however also over a hundred letters from his wine merchant (and tenant), John Broughton, which also contain some details of personal and family matters.

Very few letters date from the time of Oliver, the 10th Baron (1727-1763), though there are about ninety to the 11th Baron, Thomas Oliver. The 12th Baron, also Thomas Oliver, left only a single bundle of nineteen letters, all from 1838 and referring to 'a gross calumny' circulated against him. There is then a large gap in the correspondence between the 1840s and the 1890s, largely the period of the 13th Baron, Randal Percy Otway Plunkett. There are over six hundred letters of Randal Pilgrim Ralph (1868-1941) the 14th Baron, dating from 1892 to 1923. These include hundreds of letters from his solicitors and agents, most relating to estate matters, but also many from friends and family members.

While the Louth correspondence contains very little of political or military interest, one bundle of letters stands out. Matthew Plunkett, son of Matthew, 9th Baron, was an officer in the Austrian Imperial army during the Seven Years' War (1756-63), when Austria and France fought against Prussia and Britain. He wrote back from the battlefields to his father, mother, sister, and cousins in Ireland. Seven of these letters survive, written from Silesia, Saxony, Bohemia and Austria. Besides providing a vivid narrative of Matthew's experience of war, the letters mention other Irishmen in the Austrian army, and also refer several times to the Plunketts of Louth Hall and other members of the family.

The Louth collection includes some papers related to a separate estate, that of the 14th Baron's uncle, Captain Ralph McGeough Bond Shelton, in county Armagh. Captain Bond Shelton's home was The Argory, four miles from the village of Moy which was near the border with Tyrone. Ralph was the son of Walter McGeough Bond, who had built the Argory in the 1820s. He adopted the additional name of Shelton after a relation. In 1852 Captain Bond Shelton survived the wreck of the troopship Birkenhead off the African coast. In 1867, his sister Anne Maria married the 13th Baron Louth, Randal Percy Otway Plunkett. She died the following year, a month after giving birth to their son Randal, who was to become the 14th Baron Louth. The MacGeough Bond family were small landlords. In 1876 William MacGeough Bond of The Argory held 1,421 acres, much of it in Westmeath, while two other members of the family, Mrs Bond and Edward S. McGeough Bond, held a further 806 acres.

It seems that in 1907 Lord Louth took over the management of the Argory estate while his uncle, Captain Bond Shelton, was recovering from an accident. These papers include letters between the two men, some documents related to land purchase on the Argory estate, lists of tenants on the estate, estate farm and domestic accounts including some from as early as 1898, correspondence between Lord Louth and Captain Bond Shelton's steward Isaac Allen, and letters to Captain Bond Shelton from tenants, solicitors and others. Among Lord Louth's personal correspondence are many letters referring to Captain Bond Shelton. The Captain, who had married but had no children, died in 1916. The house at Moy remained in the family and was given to the National Trust in 1979.

The Louth papers contain little of artistic or literary interest. However the collection includes over fifty printed books, mostly dating from between the 1830s and the 1880s. These include French novels, travel volumes, schoolbooks, and several pamphlets and journals. They were presumably part of a much larger library at Louth Hall. Other evidence of the Plunketts' literary tastes can be found in the household receipts, which list many books and periodicals bought by members of the family. The collection's outstanding item of artistic interest is a handbill advertising Richard Brinsley Sheridan's The School for Scandal, to be performed on 27 March 1797 at Dundalk by the Ulster Company.

The main value of the Louth papers as a whole lies in providing insights into the day-to-day running of an estate and its interaction with the wider community, the experience of tenants and estate employees, and the daily life and changing fortunes over several centuries of a long-established minor landed family. The papers are a valuable source of genealogical information and an important primary source for the study of the social and economic history of the region where the estate was situated.

Arrangement of the collection

As the original order of the papers was disturbed, a new arrangement has been imposed. The archive is now arranged into six subgroups of varying sizes: (1) estate administration, (2) the estate farm, (3) the household, (4) the personal papers of family members, including letters and wills, (5) printed material and (6) miscellaneous items. Each subgroup is arranged by class of document (as indicated in the Table of Contents). The collection comprises of 59 archival boxes. The collection is mostly in good condition, although some of the older paper documents have become fragile or are torn, several having suffered water damage.

A number of other archival collections contain material related to the estate. While none of the estate maps resulting from the estate surveys by Frain and McQuillan in 1832-3 or McGahon in 1906 are in the National Library's collection, the 1832-3 maps are held by the County Louth Archaeological and Historical Society, and have been deposited, on loan, in the Louth County Archive, Dundalk. This volume of twenty-one maps also contains corresponding references giving the names of the tenants, a description of the soil, and the area of each holding in both Irish and statute acres. An index shows the extent of each of the denominations on the estate. These lists of tenants and the index are reproduced in Noel Ross's article, 'A Survey of the Estate of Lord Louth in 1832-1833'. The maps themselves were used in the management of the estate in later years and most of them have notes in pen or pencil showing changes in tenancies and other information. The County Louth Archaeological and Historical Society also holds Lord Louth's personal diary for 1900.

Several items related to the Plunkett family are contained in other collections of papers held by the National Library, namely the Townley Hall papers, which include a letter of Lord Louth dated 1690, and the Buccleuch and Queensberry manuscripts. These items are listed in the Hayes catalogue (Supplement) under 'Louth'.

Two related collections of papers are held by the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland (PRONI), Belfast. The first of these is the McGeough Bond collection. The papers of another county Louth estate, the Massereene Papers, which have been listed by the PRONI, contain many items related to the Lords Louth. Some of these are also listed in Diarmuid Mac Iomhair's article about the Plunketts, published in 1966 in the Journal of the County Louth Archaeological Society. Mac Iomhair also noted and listed some papers, including legal papers and a will of Matthew, 7th Baron dated 1689, which were then (1966) in the family papers of the late Mrs. Pyke-Fortescue of Stephenstown, county Louth.

As none of the Plunketts of Tallanstown was of national importance, they have not attracted biographers. However, since they were among the Catholic lords who took part in the conflicts of the seventeenth century, they are mentioned in several histories of those events. Otherwise, besides the entries in the standard works of reference on the titled gentry, most references to the family and the estate are found in local histories and in articles in the Journal of the County Louth Archaeological and Historical Society. The more significant of the latter are listed below.

Notes: In the collection list, members of the Plunkett family are generally referred to by personal name and title. When the lordship was created in 1541 the actual title granted to the Plunketts was Baron Louth, and the Plunketts were never given any other aristocratic title. The family name was often spelled 'Plunket' until 'Plunkett' became the standard spelling in the nineteenth century. In the list, the older version is only used in direct quotations from documents. Likewise, Matthew, a common name in the family, was often 'Mathew' in earlier documents.

- MS 40,050/1-10 Documents and papers in the suit of Oliver Plunkett (10th Baron Louth) V Charles 8th Baron Blayney, Robert Parkinson, Thomas Fortescue, Dr William King, Mathew Plunkett (his youngest brother), Susanna Plunkett (his mother), Plunket Henry Talbot, Elizabeth Talbot (nee Plunkett), Mabella Plunkett, Jane Plunkett (sisters), Mathew Plunkett (a minor, eldest son & heir apparent)
- MS 40,051/1-11
- MS 40,052 /1-8 Hamilton Gorges, Catherine Gorges, Anthony Foster, Trevor Stannus and Francis Tuke. On the deaths of Charles [Talbot] 8th Baron Blayney and Robert Parkinson in 1761, renewed action is taken against Cadwallader, 9th Baron Blayney (brother to Charles) and Diana Parkinson, Theobald Wolfe and John Barlow (executors of Robert Parkinson); Dr William King is also dead by 1761, and suit is continued against remaining trustee Thomas Fortescue; by 1769 Thomas Fortescue is also dead and suit is continued against William Henry 1st Baron Clermont (eldest son and legal heir of Thomas). The main substance of this case is an attempt through the courts to force Thomas Fortescue and Dr William King (and their successors) to convey the several lands mentioned in trust deed (of 1724 made between Fortescue and King and Matthew Plunkett 9th Baron Louth), which were to be sold to several purchasers, to convey the remaining lands to Charles 8th Baron Blayney and Robert Parkinson (trustees of the 9th Baron's will) for the several uses laid out in will including making payment out of profits of the estate to answer debts and legacies and ensuring that Oliver Plunkett (10th Baron Louth) receives rents and profits for life; these stipulations pass on to legal heirs of Blayney and Parkinson as case continues. Documents include an Answer to Bill of Complaint from Thomas Fortescue, 20 December 1755; Brief presented before Chancery for Anthony Foster, 22 November 1758; Affidavits from Dr William King, 11 May 1759; Bill of Complaint from Oliver Plunkett (10th Baron), 1762; Brief of Chief Baron on Chancery decree, 1763; Order from Lord Chancellor to Receiver, 19 December 1767; Petition for grant of Letters Missive, 1769; Notice to creditors, 9 March 1771; Order for disbursement of cash in Master's hands, 19 July 1774; and other related material. The case below, Captain Mathew Fortescue against Oliver Plunkett and others, is related to the overall settlement of the estate insofar as the former claims that conveyances of lands purchased by him have not been legally completed and he has not been given credit for loans advanced and interest due; c. 180 items in 29 folders [some folders require conservation treatment] 1754-1774 & undated.

- MS 40,053 /3-7 Documents and papers in the suit of Captain Mathew Fortescue against Oliver Plunkett (10th Baron Louth), Thomas Fortescue, Dr William King, Mathew Plunkett (brother of 10th Baron), Susanna Plunkett (widow of 9th Baron), Susanna Plunkett (her daughter), Plunkett Henry Talbot, Elizabeth Talbot (sister of 10th Baron), Mathew Plunkett (only son of said Oliver Plunkett?), Charles 8th

Baron Blayney, Robert Parkinson, Hamilton Gorges, Catherine Gorges, Anthony Foster, Trevor Stannus, Francis Tuke and others; on the deaths of Charles [Talbot] 8th Baron Blayney and Robert Parkinson in 1761, renewed action is taken against Cadwallader 9th Baron Blayney (brother to Charles) and Diana Parkinson, Theobald Wolfe and John Barlow (executors of Robert Parkinson); Dr William King is also dead by 1761, and suit is continued against remaining trustee Thomas Fortescue. This case involves Captain Fortescue's legal contest against the above parties on the ground that a number of land transactions were not legally completed and that he was not given credit for several sums lent to Matthew 9th Baron Louth. He claimed that the defence denied the validity of land transactions he made with the 9th Baron and were not prepared to allow credit for sums of money advanced, in the overall settlement of the estate contested in the opening case above. One of the principle demands made by Captain Fortescue, to have lands he purchased legally conveyed by the surviving trustees, was addressed in the hearing referred to in the above case, 23 Dec 1768. Documents of note include a Bill of Complaint, 1759; Interrogatories, 1761; Amended Bill of Complaint, 11 May 1763; Order to tax bill of costs, 1764; Draft Answers, undated; and other related material; c. 20 items in 5 folders

It is alleged by the 10th Baron and Gaughran that the opposite parties are intentionally keeping sluice gates at mill of Slane closed in order that fish might be removed in that vicinity, a course of action which is depriving the fishery along the lands of Carrickdexter and Cruicetown, county Meath, of fish, and depriving Gaughran, tenant to the 10th Baron on these lands, of income from same. The court is asked to ensure that the mill floodgates are kept open at particular times. Documents of note include Affidavit of Thomas Gaughran, 26 April 1770, copy of agreement to stop proceedings, 1 May 1770, a writ of injunction, 10 May 1770, and other papers; 14 items 1770
